Wilmington Eyes Corridor Options

A Wilmington area rail-trail task force was formed Jan. 13 to bring together city, county, development, recreation and historical interests to study preserving and utilizing Wilmington's abandoned corridors.

The task force first needs to sort out the various corridor opportunities and options. (See inside historical article on four major corridor abandonments.) The Wilmington area rail abandonments offer multi-county regional trail possibilities, as well as metro greenway possibilities.

One of the prime trail prospects is the Wilmington-Jacksonville-New Bern corridor. Citizens in Jacksonville have brought the corridor's possibilities to Onslow County planners.

The New Hanover County-Wilmington task force jelled after rail-trail presentations were made by NCRT, NC Division of Parks and Recreation and both city and county planners at a

Park Association Favors Stokes County Rail-Trail

Members of the Germantown Park Association in Stokes County are expressing interest in making a rail-trail out of a Norfolk Southern line between Brooks Cove and Rural Hull. Service was recently stopped on the line and abandonment is expected.

The line passes the existing Germantown Park. The association contact is David Simpson, 919-969-6121.

Sometimes a bit here and morsel there add up to a bigger story when put into context. The context in this case is a statewide movement.

New local rail-trail initiatives are popping up throughout the state, existing trail initiatives are gathering organization and serious effort, and the state's oldest rail-trail project is moving toward reality. When a dozen or more groups in widespread locations foster the same goal, it qualifies as a bonafide movement.

Rails-to-trails is a 25-year history of a true grassroots movement. Some thought that North Carolina was not fertile ground for nurturing rail-trails. However, the seed is sown and is now taking root in the state's diverse sands, clays and rocks. Even when too much fertilizer is dumped on a good idea, that seed will sprout, send out runners and become established.

A sure sign that rail-trails are taking root in the Tarheel State: The North Carolina Farm Bureau Federation recently voted to oppose the leasing of railbanked corridors for recreational purposes. The reasons cited were: Trespassers throwing trash on private property and the risk of fires in timberland.

It should be noted that Farm Bureau opposition is an essential prerequisite for rail-trails. The Farm Bureau has spouted similar logic in nearly every state prior to the establishment of successful rail-trail programs.

Triangle Keeps Project On Track

Progress on the Durham-Bonsal American Tobacco Trail continues on schedule with a project master plan expected before summer.

A contract for development of the master plan has been awarded to Greenways Inc. of Cary. A management team made up of the involved agencies and interest groups is overseeing the project and soon will be holding public hearings to solicit public inputs. The master plan will establish project guidelines and recommend methods for acquiring, developing and managing the rail-trail conversion.

The 25-mile trail project was initiated by the Triangle Rails-to-Trails Conservancy, which has gathered support in a three-county area. Funding for master plan development came from the state Adopt-A-Trail program, Durham and Wake counties, and consideration from Greenways Inc.

Cleveland Committee Recommends Action

A Cleveland County study committee has reported back to the county commissioners with a recommendation to move ahead on a rail-trail conversion from Shelby west to the county line.

The study group urged that the county start negotiations to acquire the corridor from Norfolk Southern. The recommendations took on a note of urgency when it was learned that the railroad has contracted to salvage the rails, ties and bridges.

Whistle Stops: One Pot Doesn't Feed All

Contributors to the national Rails-to-Trails Conservancy have been requesting information about how their gifts are helping their local rails-to-trails efforts. Other RTC members want discounts on their state memberships because of their national memberships. (See letters.)

It saddens us to inform these rail-trail enthusiasts that they are sending their money out of North Carolina with no direct on-the-ground benefits to them or to NCRT's state program.

RTC is an effective national lobby in Washington; NCRT is your grassroots state advocate, plus working directly in many additional ways to preserve North Carolina rail corridors and to put rail-trails on the ground, here, in our state.

NCRT is a statewide citizens' all-volunteer, not-for-profit organization, started as a steering committee at the 1988 North Carolina Greenways Conference. NCRT was incorporated in March, 1990. RTC early-on denied NCRT's request for state chapter status due to limited resources, North Carolina's deterring state property laws and the state Attorney General's interpretation of those statutes.

Contributions to RTC support a staff which lobbies for favorable federal policies and funding; your support of NCRT works to change state laws, to preserve North Carolina rail corridors and to provide North Carolinians with safe, non-motorized commuting and recreation options.

When you pay your money, please note the choice.

Dear Sirs:

I recently pledged $100 to your program through United Way at my place of employment. It is my desire that more areas be available for cycling and other outdoor activities be realized through the conversion of unused railroad rights-of-way to trails such as your program is intended. Many urban areas such as Raleigh do not have areas to cycle without the dangers of automobiles and heavy traffic.

Donald L. Safrit, PE, Apex, NC

Dear Mr. Safrit:

Thank you for your contribution to the national rail-trails effort by your workplace giving to Earth Shares through the United Way. I'm sure Rails-to-Trails Conservancy in Washington, DC will very much appreciate your $100 contribution. However, North Carolina Rail-Trails is not affiliated with RTC nor do we benefit from your generosity to them. Perhaps next year you will have an opportunity to put your money to work for you in North Carolina.

Al Capehart, NCRT

Proponents of Railroad Corridor Greenway have adopted four Lincolnton streets and are turning out regularly to keep the roadways trash free. The rail-trail advocates were the first citizens to volunteer for the new city clean-up program, thus demonstrating that trail proponents are squeaky clean on the trash issue.

Deep River Adds Historical Rail Touches

Chatham County has been notified that it is to receive $32,000 during 1995 from the NCDOT Bicycle Program for bike route markings and route maps. The Deep River Park Association is working to make the Gulf-Cummock Rail-Trail a major link in the area's bike routes.

That effort recently got a boost when the association reached an agreement with NCDOT to acquire the historic camelback truss bridge in Cummock. Association president Margaret Jordan-Ellis also announced that Norfolk Southern has agreed to site the old Atlantic & Yadkin Railway depot. The depot and a cabooses, which was acquired last fall, will form the focal point for displaying the area's railroad history.
